Mental Health and Music Factsheet

People with experience of mental illness often have a special relationship with music, as the five men and women featured in Community Channel's Mad for Music films – Heather, James, Christopher, Helen and Wayne - confirm. As an instinctive, universal experience that can express the heights and depths of our feelings, music can be a comfort and a very real helpmate on the road to recovery.

The Mad for Music films were first broadcast on Channel Five and Community Channel in October 2007. They were made by Media Trust Productions and were funded by the Arts Council and five.

THE STORIES AND SONGS

These five short films look at the profound impact of a chosen piece of music on an individual's mental ill health.

Heather has chosen Talk by Coldplay. She says "Talk sums up how you feel when you have to suffer in silence." As a teenager, Heather struggled with Obsessive Compulsive Disorder (OCD). An obsession with numbers led her to count calories and constantly monitor her weight until she was admitted to hospital with a diagnosis of anorexia nervosa. Now 22 and in recovery, she believes the 'main purpose in life is to talk and communicate'.

James has chosen Wish You Were Here by Pink Floyd. While at university, James had a psychotic episode and was diagnosed with schizophrenia. This song reminds him of his time in a psychiatric hospital and how his family wished he were at home with them. The lyrics 'We're just two lost souls swimming in a fish bowl' confirms James's view that everyone is in some sense 'lost' in the world. James is now in recovery and soon he hopes to set up his own band.

Thank You for the Days by Kirsty MacColl means everything to Helen. "For me, the song is a hymn of thanks for everything my daughter has given me." Helen was prescribed antidepressants and, on the day she took them, started to hallucinate. She took an overdose and ended up in hospital, where she was diagnosed with severe depression with psychotic symptoms. Kirsty MacColl's version of the bittersweet song acts as a coping mechanism for Helen by reminding her that she has this 'amazing, fantastic, incredible child'. Eight years on, Helen says she can now 'manage all her symptoms'.

Christopher has chosen Stand By Me by Ben E. King "I sing to live, and our group stands by me," he says. Born with partial sight, in 1997 Christopher had a severe attack of glaucoma, which left him blind and unable to continue his career as a piano tuner. He spiralled into severe depression and was temporarily hospitalised, unable to access feelings of joy or sadness. Chris rediscovered the Ben E. King song when he joined Sing Your Heart Out, a choir for people with experience of mental health problems. He believes singing is a 'miracle' that is helping him out of his depression.

Wayne has chosen Fever by Ronnie Laws. Wayne met the most significant person in his life - Paulette - in the 1970s at a Liverpool jazz funk club. But after several years of happiness together, Paulette died suddenly from a brain aneurism. Wayne left his work and his home and became heavily dependant on hard drugs. Eventually, he attempted suicide. A mutual friend had given Wayne and Paulette Ronnie Laws' version of Fever in the early days of their relationship. It reminds him of the good times he had with Paulette and has helped him gradually come to terms with his loss.

MUSIC THERAPY

Music has been recognised as a powerful therapeutic tool since the Second World War. Many returning US veterans described how music had helped their recovery, and so hospitals started to employ musicians as part of their clinical teams.

In the UK, Paul Nordoff and Clive Robbins pioneered the use of music-making to enhance communication and enable people to live more productive and creative lives.

Music therapy is based on the belief that everyone can respond to music. Even people who are profoundly troubled or isolated can express their internal experiences through music and thereby improve their self-esteem. (see Organisations below)
